

jute disintegration

a performance installation

attempt 2

It is the second attempt. There are ropes. Also, people.

They are tied/tying themselves to/on/around/above/below themselves, others, other things, sometimes with many ropes, or only one. Some are standing, or sitting, or lying. Or suspended, self- or otherwise, partly/mostly on the ground, in the air.

Sometimes they move together, sometimes singly.

The ones alone sometimes come to others together, many or few, join or leave, form or disband, from there to another there.

It is a dance, of sorts.

They are dressed. Costumes, make-up, hair.

Time passes and this changes. Each is unique and each is identical; difference and repetition.

This is an installation as much as a performance. It is baroque, somewhere, also a physical oratory.

It is an anarchy of shibari. unshibari.
